The New York Public Library will receive $1,750,000 from the estate of Dr. Albert Ashton Berg, New York surgeon, bibliophile and philanthropist who died July 1. The bequest is left in trust to the library, of which Dr. Berg was himself a trustee. It will be used to maintain and extend the Henry W. and Albert A. Berg Collection of rare books and manuscripts, one of the most notable collections of its kind.

The collection was presented to the library ten years ago by Dr. Berg in memory of his brother, Dr. Henry W. Berg, also a bibliophile and physician, who died in 1938. At that time Dr. Berg also established a $250,000 trust fund to maintain the collection. Since then he has added two other large collections, the W. T. H. Howe Collection and the Owen D. Young Collection (half of which was given by Mr. Young).

The collection is now valued at millions of dollars, according to the library, and contains more than 40,000 manuscripts and printed books by all English and American literary figures of consequence since Chaucer.

Some of the more precious items are all four Shakespeare folios, with variant copies of the third and fourth and a perfect copy of the first edition of Shakespeare's poems; a first edition of Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard"; a first edition of Poe's "Tamerlane"; the manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's unfinished last novel, "The Siege of Malta," and virtually all the rarest printings of Dickens and Thackeray.

Other large bequests included in Dr. Berg's will are $250,000 in trust to the International College of Surgeons, of which he was a former president, and a $250,000 [illegible] to the New York [illegible] of Medicine.

The Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York and the Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York were each bequeathed $150,000 in trust for philanthropic, educational or religious purposes. The University of Pennsylvania received $150,000 in trust for the establishment of a chair for the teaching of religious thought, including the Hebrew religion. Dr. Berg suggested that the chair might be dedicated to his parents and be named the Morris and Josephine Berg Professorship for

Merchant Was Leader In Many Fields

Edmund J. Kaufmann, sixty-four, chairman of the board of directors of Ampal — the American Palestine Trading Corporation, a former president of the Zionist Organization of America and one of the leaders of the United Jewish Appeal, died at his home in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Kaufmann made many large contributions to various Jewish causes, including the United Jewish Appeal and the Weizmann Institute of Science. In June, 1948, at a dinner celebrating Mr. Kaufmann's sixtieth birthday, messages praising his activities were received from President Truman and Herbert H. Lehman, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Henry Morgenthau jr., general chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, and other U.J.A. leaders issued a statement saying that Mr. Kaufmann exemplified "the highest qualities of communal statesmanship and dedication to the needs of the Jewish people in Israel, Europe and the United States." Benjamin G. Browdy, president of the Zionist Organization of America, also praised Mr. Kaufmann for his Zionist activities.

Born in Detroit, the son of Aron and Jeannette M. Kaufmann, Mr. Kaufmann was educated by private tutors. He was president of the Kay Jewelry Stores, founded in 1916, which has eighty-five retail stores throughout the country. Since 1910 he has been a partner in Finsterwalde, a retail clothing company in Toledo, an officer of Kaufmann's Furniture Company in Reading, Pa., since 1916, and a member of other firms.

He was elected president of the Z. O. A. in June, 1940, serving until [illegible] September, 1941, when [illegible] to run for re-election because of ill health. Mr. Kaufmann was one of the founders of Ampal in 1942 and chairman of the board since that time. Ampal, which has a capital of more than $13,000,000, does an annual business of $25,000,000 with Israel. Ampal is an American corporation engaged in trade with and investment in Israel.

He was one of the founders of the United Jewish Appeal in 1939 and a leader of the organization since that time. In 1941 he was one of the U. J. A.'s national campaign co-chairmen, in 1946 and

Famous Specialist Was Oldest Columbia Alumnus

Dr. Alfred Meyer, ninety-six, internationally known tuberculosis specialist and oldest alumnus of Columbia University, died in his sleep at his summer home at Ogunquit, Maine. His home was at 1225 Park Avenue, New York, where he had lived for twenty-four years.

The small — he was 5 feet 2 inches in height — wiry, white-haired, white bearded physician took particular delight in his claim to fame as Columbia's oldest alumnus, a title he aspired to throughout his life but won officially four years ago. He was also proud of his position as the oldest living native of New York's Greenwich Village, although he had not lived there for ninety-one years.

A crusader in the field of tuberculosis, and a renowned diagnostician, Dr. Meyer was a founder of the Committee on Prevention of Tuberculosis of the Charity Organization Society, in 1902, which later became the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association. He was instrumental in the organization of the city's tuberculosis sanatorium at Otisville, the State institution at Raybrook and the Montefiore Hospital Country Sanatorium at Bedford Hills, N. Y., says the New York Herald Tribune.

He was born at 147 Amos Street, which later became West Tenth Street, in Greenwich Village, but five years later "moved up north to the country at Thirty-fourth Street" with his family. The son of Isaac and Mathilda Langenbach Meyer, in his youth he studied the piano and later was considered one of the most accomplished amateur pianists in New York. Educated [illegible] Madison Avenue and Forty-ninth Street, at the age of sixteen and decided on a medical career in his junior year. He enrolled in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1874 and was graduated with an outstanding record in 1877.

Dr. Meyer had recalled that he passed his internship examination by answering two questions, one on how to treat a gunshot wound and the other about a cure for typhoid. He devoted a year to his internship at Mt. Sinai Hospital and two years to study at Leipzig and Vienna.

In 1880 he took up his practice in New York and won acclaim for his unorthodox but highly successful methods. An accomplished pianist, Dr. Meyer relied heavily on his senses of hearing and touch in diagnosis. Instead of the customary black bag, he carried with him on his call a box-like arrangement, two and a half feet square, weighing twenty-five pounds, in which he carried, in addition to his swabs, stethoscopes and other equipment, a machine to supplement his senses of hearing and touch.

In 1905 Dr. Meyer attended the First International Congress for Tuberculosis, held in Paris. He addressed many meetings on the Continent and was instrumental in bringing Dr. Robert Koch and Dr. Von Pirquet, tuberculosis specialists, to America.

Three years later, because of Dr. Meyer's efforts, the international tuberculosis show was brought to New York. Dr. Meyer raised the necessary funds from private contributions, and when the Congress opened 216 individual exhibits were shown. The United States supplied 142 and European and American countries, outside the United States, seventy-four.

The Congress was a success, particularly the unpasteurized milk exhibit of New York State. Dr. Meyer explained that the exhibit had done more toward checking the ravages of consumption than a thousand demonstrations. The city thanked him officially for his accomplishment, "a service that New York could never repay, says the New York Times.

A fellow physician described his method as "a kind of human piano-tuning operation," but Dr. Meyer never lost a typhoid patient and rarely a pneumonia case.

An outstanding diagnostic achievement in 1898 turned Dr. Meyer's interest to lung [illegible]. He diagnosed with the aid of the machine an epidemic of what was supposedly [illegible] of the [illegible]

Warns Of Peril To Jews In Unstable Areas

Dr. Israel Goldstein, at his first press conference since assuming the chairmanship of the Western Hemisphere Branch of the World Jewish Congress executive, warned that "in today's precarious situation when war threatens to engulf vast areas of the world," it is necessary "to be on the alert for any new peril that might threaten the Jews" as a minority group in some areas of the world. Asserting that the "exact nature and locale" of these perils cannot be predicted, Dr. Goldstein reported, however, that in the past three years the World Jewish Congress has had to intervene to protect the status of Jews in Egypt, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Aden, Iran, Bahrein, Algeria, and Pakistan. Reporting that the World Jewish Congress in the past three years acted on 150 cases concerned with the status of Jewish DPs, the curbing of anti-Semitic propaganda in Germany, and other problems relating to that country, Dr. Goldstein stressed the danger of "the resurgence of Nazism in the whole of Germany."

"There is a clear and present danger that the neo-Nazi, extreme rightist, militarist nationalist element in Western Germany, to realize their anti-democratic aims, might seek to bargain at the expense of the ideals for which we fought World War II," he said. There are in West Germany today 23 splinter groups of a vicious nationalist character, he pointed out, "quite apart from the extreme nationalism manifested by parties represented in the coalition government and by the appointment of die-hard Nazis to high posts in the Bonn government."

[illegible] that the International Red Cross and various governments be so amended as to give the International Red Cross the authority to investigate the treatment of civilian internees in time of war. "Had the International Red Cross such authority in World War II," he said, "thousands of Europe's Jewish martyrs might have been rescued."

Dr. Goldstein announced that these officers have been chosen to serve with him on the Western Hemisphere Branch of the Congress executive: Rabbi Philip Bernstein, of Rochester, N.Y.; and Judge Louis Levinthal, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Shad Polier, of New York; and Dr. Robert S. Marcus, of New York.

The World Jewish Congress is a voluntary association of Jewish communities and organizations in 84 countries throughout the world organized for the purpose of protecting Jewish civic and religious rights, promoting Jewish culture and education, and strengthening the forces of Jewish survival. Among its leading affiliates are the American Jewish Congress, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the British Section of the World Jewish Congress, and the DAYA which is the most representative Jewish body in Argentina. The policies of the Congress are determined by an executive representing affiliates in all parts of the world.

Dr. Goldstein said that there are today a little over 11,000,000 Jews throughout the world; 6,000,000 Jews perished in Nazi-occupied Europe. As a direct consequence of this catastrophe, the geographical distribution of Jews has changed radically. In 1938, 31.7% of all Jews resided in the Americas, and 59.3% in Europe. Now, 61.03% Jews reside in the Americas, and 30.17% reside in Europe. Migrations and decimations have increased the number of small Jewish communities throughout the world whose cultural and religious survival depend on the cooperation and assistance of the global Jewish community. Through the WJC they have been getting text-books and other facilities for Jewish education, as well as assistance in organizing their group life.

The WJC, one of ninety non-governmental agencies with consultative status at the U.N., is credited with one-third of all submissions made to the U.N. by recognized non-governmental agencies. Explaining why the WJC has concentrated so much of its activity in behalf of [illegible] Jewish minorities around the U.N., Dr. Goldstein said: "We believe that

ALUMNI STUDY NEITHER CLEARS NOR CONDEMNS PROFESSOR OF BIAS

A special committee of the City College Alumni Association, of New York, has reported after a two-year study that it could not say with "certainty that Professor William E. Knickerbocker had — or had not — practiced anti-Semitism as Romance languages chairman at the college."

The committee said in the report that it approved the handling by Dr. Harry Wright, president of City College, of the case of William C. Davis, who was accused of segregating Negro students in Army Hall, a dormitory. Mr. Davis resigned in 1948 as the $7,500-a-year director of Army Hall after a faculty committee sustained the charge. He was then reassigned to his old post as an economics instructor at $5,400 yearly. His earlier instructor's pay was $4,008. The committee's finding was that Mr. Davis "was not rewarded financially."

Students' demands for a public trial of the two teachers led in April, 1949, to a five-day undergraduate strike. At the time, Professor Knickerbocker stood accused of anti-Semitism by a City Council investigating committee, but the Board of Higher Education had withheld action following a study of charges brought by the American Jewish Congress. The State Education Department rejected last February a petition asking that charges of unprofessional conduct be brought against Professor Knickerbocker.

Professor Knickerbocker stepped down last spring from the departmental chairmanship to which he had been elected by a majority of the Romance Languages faculty for three successive four-year terms.

The report, for which the ten-member committee studied 2,000 pages of records in the five-year-old Knickerbocker case and questioned students and faculty members, was approved by the board of directors of the City College Alumni Association on May 31.

One committee member, Oscar W. Ehrhorn, '95, held that, while Mr. Davis's removal was "proper," it was not "essential." He dissented from the majority report in the Knickerbocker case, holding that "the evidence establishes that Professor Knickerbocker was not guilty of anti-Semitism."

The charges against the professor, made in 1946 by four faculty members, were that he had discriminated against Jews in faculty appointments; that he had shown bias against Jewish students and made disparaging remarks about them as a group, and that he had awarded the Ward medal for proficiency in French in 1942 to a non-Jew when a Jewish student, Morton Gurewitch, had made better grades. Mr. Gurewitch later received a duplicate medal.

The committee reported testimony that Professor Knickerbocker had made anti-Semitic remarks; that the number of Jews appointed to the department from 1938 to 1945 was "negligible" — but that most Jewish faculty members found him free of bias. It said most former students questioned said that he treated all students "alike." The students said he had been a strict disciplinarian and used words like "nimrodless"

ISRAELI NURSES STRIKE FOR SHORTER WEEK

Hospital nurses throughout Israel began a strike, demanding a forty-two-hour week during the summer months. Affected by the strike are all Government hospitals, the Municipal Hospital in Tel Aviv and the Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem.

Skeleton staffs and student nurses kept the hospitals running but clinics were shut. Operating room personnel remained on duty.

The demand for a shorter week has been met by trade union hospitals and private institutions so they are not struck. The trade union representing the nurses in negotiations with the Government had secured consent to their demands for an increase in family allowances and more annual leave. They, therefore, opposed the strike.

Opposition to the strike also is motivated by the fact that the polio outbreak now is at its peak.

One hundred delegates to the Fifth National Convention of the Intercollegiate Federation of America (IZFA) heard James G. Heller, a leading Reform rabbi, of Cincinnati, Ohio, assert that a gradual education of American youth is necessary in order to encourage emigration to Israel. Rabbi Heller warned that those who seek to convince youth of the importance of building Israel by "fulminating in their faces" with extreme statements will only alienate those whom they seek to convince. He spoke forcefully, however, in favor of the necessity of presenting the chanlenge of pioneering to the Jewish college students. A major policy decision, asserting that the most vital task of IZFA is "to offer to the American Jewish college student the intellectual and emotional equipment which will enable him to consider the possibility of participating personally in the upbuilding of Israel," was passed by a large majority of the delegates. The resolution goes on to recognize, however, that IZFA should continue to participate in activities in American Jewish life, and that those who engage in such activities are "valued as highly as those who do go to Israel."

Aimless Youth Means International Group Decay

BY HERBERT RICHER, OF LONDON, ENGLAND

The Anglo-Jewish community has in its midst a cancer which is sapping the energy and spirit from the body of Judaism and, unless wise and speedy action is taken, it may eventually consume us. The problem is most acute in the thickly populated Jewish district of Stamford Hill, although it has spread to other communities and will spread to more. Nearly every evening, dozens, perhaps hundreds, of Jewish boys and girls, some in their "teens, some in their twenties, gather on the main thoroughfare. And there they stand idly, aimlessly, drifting from one small group to another, for hours on end, evening after evening, week after week, month after month.

Who are they? How do they affect the larger community? They are certainly Jewish; their Jewish allegiance involves some traditions of antiquity but the word "religion" is old-fashioned and they have no use for it. Their pride in being Jewish does not spring from a knowledge and love of Judaism and Jewish history. Rather it is stubborn pride forced unwillingly upon them. They are English but it is not their over-riding loyalty to this country that has detracted them from their loyalty to Judaism. How to avoid the responsibilities of good citizenship is their chief worry and they are more concerned with the values of life determined by indiscriminate cinema-going, by the amusement arcade, the dog track, football pools, trashy magazines, and sensational journalism. Mission, obligation, responsibility, duty, purpose — these are words to be sneered and scoffed at.

The problem is a national one. So much so that the rector of a remote Cornish parish, in commenting on "the future of a people who had nothing better to do with their lives than this endless, futile, mentally-feeble escapism," was forced to say, "as a nation we are approaching rapidly the age of spiritual darkness and bankruptcy." This, alas, is also true of the Jewish community and, however detrimental it may be to the life of the nation, it is absolutely corrupting for us to suffer from such internal decay. It is no use walking by as if these people did not exist, as local residents attempt to do. Nor is it of use for non-residents aware of the situation to sympathise but to dismiss it as being of no concern of theirs. And perhaps this article will acquaint many with a terrible problem of which hitherto they have been unaware but which vitally affects them. For the young people of Stamford Hill are members of the Anglo-Jewish community, and they are setting the standards by which the general community is judged. Many of them are indeed making us "a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision, a byword, a shaking of the head among the people."

As orthodoxy fifty years ago could not adapt itself to the changing times and Liberal Judaism had not yet appeared, religion and religious education, apart from the few traditional and deeply ingrained customs, were neglected by the parents and grandparents of these young people. The Reform movement was spiritually isolated from the large East-End community until 1914, when the Oxford and St. George's Settlement was founded; but by this time the damage had been done.

In the voluntarily-created new ghettoes there has been little opportunity to absorb the much hoped for English environment and the descendants of the generation to whom Judaism became a religion of the past stand to-day at the street corners appallingly ignorant of their ancient heritage and responsibility, calling themselves Jewish by virtue of their practice of a few customs, the meanings of which they neither know nor wish to know. We dare not imagine the fearful effect in ten years' time that the children of such parents will have on the community.

The evil effects all Jews and, if we are to arrest the immense harm that is being done to the Anglo-Jewish community, firm action must be taken immediately. The first step is the prompt establishment of a large community centre, based, perhaps, on the work of the St. George's Settlement. There may even be a case for the removal of the Settlement to North London but the word "Settlement" must go, for here is no problem of poverty or squalid homes. Here, chiefly, it is spiritual malaise that is causing the trouble. We need a centre covering all possible kinds of physical and cultural activities, similar to the admirable central London clubs of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., but catering for all ages. As in these associations, there must be, in the background, spiritual guidance, ever present.

Recently, Capt. W. Sebag-Montefiore, of Montreal, spoke of the great importance that the communal centre has in Canadian Jewish life. "Before building a new synagogue," he said, "we build a communal centre. We must cater for the youth if we are to have a Jewish community in the future." Stamford Hill can rightly claim that the need for such a centre is nowhere more pressing, for this district comprises one of the largest single Jewish communities in Great Britain. It is entitled, therefore, to ask for support from all London and beyond.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for the Progressive movements to work together as they did to establish the Settlement thirty-six years ago. A short while ago, at the Conference of the World Union, we met to discuss "the present problem for religion." Here is a problem on our own door-step and, unless this one is first solved, within a few years there will be no properly organized community to solve problems anywhere. If large sums of money can be raised for the preservation of Jewish life in Palestine, similar sums can and must be raised for the preservation of Jewish life in this country. Youth ministers and welfare officers can only shoulder the immense task of saving Jewish youth if they have the full support and encouragement of the community who must be made fully aware of the gravity of the problem and eager to remove it. The problem must be kept to the fore and be the subject of constant discussion but we must not forget that "the day is short and the work is great... and the Master of the House is urgent."

FAMOUS SPECIALIST

that he would specialize in lung ailments.

Dr. Meyer had several brushes with the City Council over his "new-fangled notions," which involved the theory that people should breathe fresh air and his recommendation to tenement district patients that they spend as much time as possible sitting on their fire escapes.

Although he retired from practice in 1930, Dr. Meyer continued his interest in medicine. He was a consulting physician at Mt. Sinai and Montefiore Hospitals, a fellow of the American College of Physicians and an active member of the American Thorac Society, the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association, the American Medical Association, the New York State Medical Society, the New York County Medical Society, the New York Academy of Medicine and the Harvey Society, of almost all of which he claimed to be the oldest living member.

Dr. Meyer and his wife, the former Annie Nathan, whom he married in 1887, seldom missed a Columbia or Barnard College function. Mrs. Meyer is a senior trustee of Barnard. The couple, who met through their mutual interest in music, observed their fiftieth anniversary with a joint piano recital for friends at the Women's Faculty Club at Columbia, and held court there again on their sixtieth anniversary three years ago.

Besides Mrs. Meyer, who was with her husband when he died, there are no immediate survivors. Their only child, Mrs. Ira Cohen, died in 1923. She was a member of the class of 1915 at Barnard and in her memory her parents established the Margaret Meyer Graduate Scholarship there.

A service will be held in New York in the fall on Mrs. Meyer's return from Maine.

To Evaluate Community Relations Work

Dr. Robert M. MacIver, whose retirement as Lieber professor of political philosophy and sociology at Columbia University was announced, will direct a study to evaluate Jewish community relations work, it was announced by Irving Kane, chairman of the National Community Relations Advisory Council.

The Council, consisting of leading national Jewish agencies and Community Councils in various cities, authorized the study to "inquire into the areas of activity of the national and local community relations agencies, their relationships, their objectives, the assumptions on which they rest their methods and the results achieved."

Dr. MacIver will be chairman of a technical study committee consisting of social scientists on the staffs of the N.C.R.A. member agencies who will join him in planning and conducting the study.

More than $1,000,000 has been raised for the annual maintenance fund of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, it was announced by Dr. Samuel S. Hollender, general chairman of the recently concluded Combined Campaign on behalf of these national institutions of American Reform Judaism. A total of $1,013,503 has been received this year in cash contributions from congregations and individuals in contrast to $732,688 reported last year. This represents an increase of $280,855 over last year's total.

Portrait Of Leon Blum, Thrice Premier Of France

BY DR. H. G. SIMON

Three days before his death, Léon Blum published in his organ, "Le Populaire", a poignant tribute to Harold Laski. The two friends had more in common than their Socialist and Jewish persuasions. On both Labour leaders their upper middle class origins had left indelible traces; both believed in education and evolution rather than agitation and revolution; they were men of intellect and thought rather than men of action, and their thought was marked by logic and lucidity rather than by originality and depth; their superb qualities of mind and character militated against their success in practical politics to an extent which raises the question whether they were natural and born politicians or rather men of letters and educationists; and of greater stature and importance as moral, than as political, forces.

Léon Blum, indeed, lacked the essential prerequisites for public life: ambition and lust for power; he took up his career almost by accident and as a result of circumstances which were not of his own choice. As with so many of his generation, "l'affaire", the Dreyfus case, acted as a stimulus. It touched him deeply as a French patriot, a Jew and a Socialist; these three elements dominated his make-up, and formed a complete entity. Without the outbreak of war, and the assassination of his admired mentor, Jean Jaurès, on its eve, he might have spent all his active life in the Council of State, that exclusive oligarchy at the top of the Civil Service, and as a distinguished writer; his way seemed to lead not to the Palais Bourbon and the Prime Ministry but the Sorbonne and the Academy. In recent years still he would have preferred to devote himself to UNESCO and the Council of Europe, and not to the political offices which his sense of duty compelled him to accept.

Once he had made the jump — as "chef de cabinet" or right-hand man of one of the Socialists in the war cabinet — there was no looking back. The magic and magnetism of politics had seized him. His career developed almost automatically.

Deputy of a Paris constituency, chairman of the Socialist Party, Prime Minister — it was the logic of events. For the premier office he had to wait until 1936; he had made up his mind to accept no other ministerial post, and the highest only when his party was the strongest in the House. He held it thrice: the most spectacular though hardly the most successful was in 1936/7 at the head of the "Popular Front," an experiment that failed.

In the inter-war years, in and out of office, he was the pet bogy of big business and the petty bourgeois, reactionary officers and militant Communists, all vested interests and anti-democratic forces. In his own ranks he met more criticism and opposition than enthusiasm and loyalty. Yet, for thirty years he was re-elected to the leadership of the party. He survived all splits and defeats. In periods of fiercest controversy and strife he had the ear of Parliament, of mass meetings, of France and the world. Election to the third and last Premiership, after the recent war, was practically unanimous. How did that come to pass?

A great and fascinating orator in the classical style and French tradition he was not. He lacked the sonorous and powerful voice of a Jaurès or Briand. Tall, slight, with long and thin legs, his figure was not imposing, and when he spoke, he nervously walked up and down the platform, passing his rolled handkerchief from one hand to the other, and continuously adjusting the rimless pince-nez which had an unfortunate tendency of falling off the long nose protruding over the drooping moustache in the pale face. Only close observers noticed the sparkle in his short-sighted eyes and the refinement of his slender hands. Rhetorical fireworks and the fanfare of a blaring peroration were alien to his way of delivery; there was nothing pompous and showy, nothing theatrical or demagogic in his speeches. Reserved, mild-mannered and, perhaps, even shy, he had none of the attributes of the popular tribune.

Other handicaps appeared to operate against political leadership, especially of a Socialist Party.

Son of a wealthy Alsatian merchant, he had nothing proletarian either in his origin or in his way of life. That in his earlier years he had been a habitué of the race courses — it was as a racing correspondent that he began his journalistic activities — and fashionable salons, an enthusiastic amateur of dancing and fencing, and a connoisseur of good food and lovely women, was only typical of the Parisian of his class at the end of the century. But he continued the existence of a "grand bourgeois" throughout his life, his residence at Jouy-en-Josas was as elegant as it was tasteful, and, after his marriage to Lisa Bloch (she died in 1930, and the following year he married Thérese Péreya, also a Jewess), was a social as well as a literary centre. No, he seemed hardly acceptable as a symbol of social revolution.

Nor was he as radical as the mood of the workers would have wished — and as his opponents labelled him. Left-wingers did not make his political life easy. His election as chairman in 1919 coincided with the secession of the Communists who, being in the majority, took party funds and the party newspaper with them; Blum, generally a moderating and conciliatory influence, let them go.

He was equally complacent — or was it instinctive foresight? — when other rebels deserted him in the thirties—Marquet, Déat, Doriot, who all landed in the Fascist and Nazi camps. Still later, his moderation was the target of an extremist group under Paul Faure who not so long thereafter was to capitulate to Vichy. Faure was at the time general secretary of the Socialists, and bound to conflict with Blum who never allowed himself to be dominated by organisation and machinery and was entirely free of the party functionary mentality.

PORTRAIT OF LEON BLUM

He found no more sympathy with the little men of the then powerful Radical Party who were fighting their anti-clerical battles of the past all over again — a habit which certain politicians share with certain generals. For their taste this intellectual was too detached and too tolerant. How could he compete with their idols, Paul-Boncour who posed as a modern Robespierre, and Daladier who was still the arch-radical "Bull of Vaucluse" and not yet the appeaser of Munich notoriety?

Not only biased judges doubted whether Blum was really a man of action, and not too much of an intellectualist, a political Hamlet. There is a grain of truth in such criticism. As Premier of the Popular Front coalition he was, in economic and foreign policies, to some extent propelled and finally expelled by events and pressure. But what was regarded as hesitancy and inaction was merely the lack of massive ruthlessness and an allergic distrust of popular catchwords, whims and changing fashions.

Again the question suggests itself how a man with such handicaps could be welcomed at his first appearance in the Chamber by a political opponent of the calibre of Raymond Poincaré, not notable for tolerance and courtesy, who interrupted a fighting speech to greet him as an asset to the House. How was it possible that his party elected and re-elected him to its chair for thirty years? that every speech of his, in Parliament and without, was a political event of the first order? that he gained from year to year in prestige, authority and stature until he became not only the Grand Old Man of French Socialism but of the Fourth Republic, and not only an elder statesman in his own country but the voice of Europe in the councils of France?

Was this in spite of his shortcomings? No, because of them, for he had all the virtues of his weaknesses, and what may have been weaknesses in a party politician and parliamentary tactician, were elements of strength in his personality and constituted the greatness of the man.

Oh yes, he was an intellectual and an intellectualist, literateur, bibliophile connoisseur and scholar, but all that not in the sense of a highbrow and amateurish dilettante. This belated scion of the Age of Enlightenment and Reason was one of the most erudite and cultured figures in contemporary France, a brilliant writer since the early days when the racing correspondent of "Revue Blanche" became its literary editor and the dramatic critic of "Matin", to the last of his lucid contributions to "Le Populaire", published on the very day of his death.

From the days of the Great Revolution to the end of the Third Republic, France had more eminent men of letters in her Parliaments and governments than any other country. With the evolution of the professional politician and the organisational machinery this combination has become rare. Blum, the friend of Proust and Bernard, Valéry, Gide and Bergson, and author of master-studies of Stendhal and Balzac, is among the last in whom literary and political activities, statecraft and culture formed an indivisible and harmonious whole; among the last representatives also of an era in which not the super-tax assessment of the successful businessman or the publicity stunts of a film star, but the production of cultural and humanitarian values were the admission tickets to the élite of society.

Now we have one clue to his unfailing success as a lecturer, speaker and debater. For what he lacked in theatrical aplomb and dramatic gestures, Blum made up by the logic and lucidity of his argument clothed in all the clarity and beauty of which the French language is capable. He never tried to persuade his audiences by sentimental appeals; he convinced them by penetrating analysis and irresistible reasoning, and if he aroused emotions, it was the passion for clear judgment, common sense and justice. He succeeded because the lucidity of his speech was the expression of the lucidity of his sharp intelligence, logical thought and clear mind. The conformity of idea and language was complete. His was the classical French intellect... a perfect balance, measure and form of thought and expression.

Greater still was another asset. Blum not only had a stronger energy than his self-control betrayed, and an enormous capacity for work and detail, but that sincerity and courage which in the end disarms and defeats the nothing-but-tactician and nothing-but-agitator.

To the world at large his indomitable courage became evident in his attitude in the Riom trial in which the accused of the Vichyites turned their accuser, and in the steadfastness with which the septuagenarian stood the test of imprisonment in the fortress of Bourrassol and the concentration camp of Buchenwald.

It could have been expected by his compatriots who knew of his conduct under the attack of royalist students on the Boulevard St. Germain. It was fundamentally the same moral courage which he had shown again and again when he annoyed his party comrades by telling them bitter and unpalatable home truths or incurred unpopularity in public meetings by pronouncing unpleasant verities instead of pleasant platitudes. It was fully in keeping with his intellectual and moral honesty that he never posed as a martyr, never sensationalised or exploited his years of suffering; when others wrote apologetics, he merely remarked, "I belong to a generation which has failed," and for the collection of his speeches he chose the title, "History Will Judge".

His integrity was rooted in his principles and ideals. It is significant that for the newspaper he founded together with Jaurès he did not choose a name like "Avanti" or "Vorwaerts", but "L'Humanité". To him, humanity came before parties and doctrines, was above classes and nations. It was the supra-national in the Marxian teachings that attracted him first and foremost. His conception of Socialism was never a narrow and sectarian one. If he was a disciple of Marx and Jaurès, and a descendant of the Age of Enlightenment and Reason, he was also, and mainly, an heir of the Great Revolution.

The Rights of Man and Citizen, the freedoms of thought and speech, the fraternity of all men of good will: that was the motive force, the mission, the aim. Thereto he never sacrificed the independence and integrity of moral judgment which he preached and which he lived.

With such beliefs, with such idealism, the heir of the Great Revolution could not be a revolutionary himself. The unwavering pacifist could not teach or condone violence. He proclaimed not socialism by revolution, but socialism through education. Hence his ardent interest in such institutions as UNESCO. He wanted not a French or German or Russian Europe, but a European France, Germany, Britain, Russia. Hence his enthusiasm for the European federal and unity movement.

Like Thomas Masaryk, Blum might have said: What is morally wrong, cannot be politically right. He was not always politically right — his own pacifism and idealism made it impossible for him to understand the dangers of Nazi aggression — but morally he was without fear and without blemish. We sometimes tend to despair of democracy when we see the masses swayed by demagogues and phrasemongers, opportunists and hot gospellers. Are we not underrating the masses and the democratic forces? Léon Blum appealed to reason and not to emotions; he gave truth instead of catchwords; he upheld his ideals and never kneeled to the idol of success; he placed justice above expediency, tolerance above fanaticism, humanity above all sectarianism; and he showed us that in the end morality triumphs — even in politics.

NOTRE DAME GROUP GIVE TO U.J.A.

The Notre Dame Alumni Association has made a contribution to the United Jewish Appeal to aid in the settlement of homeless Jews in Israel. R. A. Hamilton, chairman of the trust fund of the Notre Dame Club of New York, declared that "charity for and toward all, regardless of color, creed or religion," had inspired the alumni group's contribution.

I. Edwin Goldwasser and Jacob Sincoff, co-treasurers of the United Jewish Appeal, expressed their organization's appreciation. They said the club's participation "in this vital program is a source of real encouragement to all those working for the establishment of a new future for Jews in many parts of the world."

Until recently a child's likes and dislikes were completely ignored in his feeding schedule. Foods that were "poor for him" were crammed down by force if necessary. Child health experts now realize that, while a balanced diet is still essential, parents should adopt a more subtle attitude when dealing with finicky child appetites. The way of the "big stick" is not often the best way.

Hidden defects in your child's teeth may cause a lot of pain and trouble for him and a great deal of expense for you if they are not treated quickly. Cavities often develop even when the teeth are cleaned thoroughly and regularly, so regular visits to the dentist are a "must." Your child's "baby teeth" are important. Don't neglect them.

Heifetz Found Good Musicians In Israel

The music of contemporary Israeli composers shares "the tendency of all modern music to try not to sound too much like music," Jascha Heifetz said on returning to New York from a concert and recital tour of the new nation.

"This is a characteristic of youth and of beginnings," the violinist said. "Many composers start that way before they realize that music must have an immediate appeal."

On the other hand, he reported, the Israeli taxi drivers "whistle and sing themes from quartets, symphonies and operas," and the percentage of serious music lovers is higher than in the United States.

During his four weeks in Israel, Mr. Heifetz played ten concerts with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting. He pronounced it a "first-rate, excellent" orchestra that "compares favorably" with the better orchestras of the United States. With Emmanuel Bay, his accompanist for sixteen years, Mr. Heifetz also played six recitals.

On two truck beds put together for a stage, with a tarpaulin for a "sounding board," he played at Safed for 3,500 listeners, including hundreds of settlers from the Galilee and Northern collectives. While the moon rose above the Hills of Moab at desolate Elath, on the shores of the Red Sea, the violinist played an all-request program for 2,500 persons. Most of them were service men and women and many had had to travel ten hours each way over the rugged Negab to reach the courtyard of the former British police fortress.

If original Israeli music "has nothing much to show at the moment," the nation nevertheless is developing good young musicians, especially pianists and promising composers, Mr. Heifetz, told the New York Times. He brought back one Israeli composition, which he took with him to California and which he plans to play publicly later. Mr. Heifetz, known to some concertgoers for an apparent glacial remoteness, told with chuckling relish a story on himself to illustrate the musical "sophistication" and "music hunger" of many Israelis.

After the first symphony appearance, a driver commented that he did not think he ever had heard that particular cadenza in the Brahms concerto, and asked if it were the Joachim version.

"No," said Mr. Heifetz, "I wrote it myself. And the pity is I have to play it here eight more times."

"And that's not the worst of it," returned the driver. "I am going to hear it eight more times."

Many summer difficulties with children result from insufficient rest. Older infants and young children should go to bed at least as early on hot nights as usual — earlier if there are signs of fatigue.

COSTA RICA ASSURES WJC ON STATUS OF JEWS

The Costa Rica Government, through His Excellency Mario Echandi, Costa Rican Ambassador to the United States, assured the World Jewish Congress that the equal rights of Jews in that country will be protected. These assurances were contained in a letter from the ambassador to Dr. Robert S. Marcus, political director of the World Jewish Congress.

Released by the WJC, the letter was in reply to a communication from the WJC in which alarm was expressed over proposals introduced in the Costa Rican parliament by Representative Torres Vincenci. Vincenci's remarks in parliament indicated, in the words of the World Jewish Congress, that "this proposed legislation was aimed at the complete elimination of some Jewish merchants from the economic life of Costa Rica."

"Although the supporters of these measures have repeatedly stressed their abhorrence of religious and racial discrimination, their allegiance to the principles of constitutional and international law and the charter of the United Nations," the WJC communication to the Ambassador said, "they have, nevertheless, not refrained from publicly attacking Jewish merchants and from emphasizing the fact that the bills were directed only against this group."

In making public the reply from the Costa Rican Ambassador, Dr. Marcus said: "The World Jewish Congress is gratified by this reassuring reply. Troubled as we were by the utterances of extremists in the Costa Rican parliament, we had no doubt that an appeal to the Government would arrest this dangerous trend to disregard the principles of equality for all citizens, regardless of race or creed, contained in the democratic constitution of Costa Rica."

Fear of financial loss through long hospitalization, doctor's bills and loss of work often deters people from checking with a doctor when they suspect they are suffering from cancer. THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN ISRAEL AND THE DIASPORA

BY SIMON GREENBERG, OF THE JEWISH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF AMERICA, IN NEW YORK.

With men of independent minds, loyalty to one's own convictions is often in direct proportion to the intensity of the crisis facing them. Hence, in view of the mounting crises which the young Jewish society in Israel had and still has to face, on all fronts, one marvels, not at the divisive forces at work within the group, but at the fact that enough cohesive power was left within the community to hold it together and to lead it to such extraordinary triumphs in every area of human endeavor. Nevertheless the divisive forces within the community are still present, active and continue to be dangerous.

One should not infer from this that we would want Israel to develop into a monolithic, culturally goose-stepping society. But a society needs more than a political frame-work to give it vital cohesion. Even the unity of language and historic tradition are not enough. The American civil war is history's most tragic proof of the inadequacy of language and political institutions alone to hold a nation together. There must be an over-all unity of spiritual outlook which constantly seeks new and more effective channels for its implementation in daily life. Language and political forms are among the chief expressions of that spiritual unity. But in themselves they are not adequate. That over-all unity of spiritual outlook still has to be developed in Israel.

No one today is in a position to indicate clearly the essential nature of that over-all spiritual unity. But there must be a growing number of men who will steadfastly and wisely devote themselves to its creation, to formulating its theory and implementing its implications. He who contributes towards its creation will be among Israel's greatest benefactors.

But the comprehensive, all-inclusive, across-party-line type of thinking of which I speak is needed not only for the solution of some of the most vexing problems within the State of Israel. It is needed equally in our wrestling with the more difficult question of the relationship between Israel and the Jewish communities outside of Israel.

A recent article in a current periodical written by two American Jewish students, relates that while on a trip through Europe they watched refugees in southern France board a boat for Israel at midnight. Some of the boat's crew were young Americans. The authors note that when these young sailors learned that their visitors were also Americans, they "communicated their contempt for any one not doing what they were doing, by silence or curt answers."

No one of us whose lives have been devoted to the Zionist movement can escape entirely the feeling that when a Jew departs to take up residence in Israel, he is pointing a finger at us, not necessarily of scorn or accusation, but certainly of questioning, as if to say — why don't you come too? Nor can we escape the soul-searching which such an occasion inevitably stirs, by a vehement affirmation of faith in the future of Jewish life outside of Israel.

Far more is involved than pinning on one's lapel a tag identifying the bearer as a member of the party of "Mechayyeh hagolah", believers in the Diaspora. For one can have a very firm conviction regarding the possibility of worthwhile Jewish living outside the boundaries of Israel and yet feel very ill at ease at not going to Israel at this time to help in the mighty labors of upbuilding now facing our brethren there. Moreover, a logically constituted rationale for Jewish living in the "Galut" is not enough. It must be associated with basic emotional drives as immediate and as compelling as those which created the Zionist movement. The legitimacy of these emotional drives must be recognized not only by the Jews living outside of Israel, but also by those living in Israel.

Human beings need the good-will of their fellow men generally, but they need above all the good-will and understanding of their own kith and kin. As Jews, we need the good-will of neighbors. But we also need one another's good-will. It would be tragic, indeed, if those of us who choose or are compelled to live outside of Israel would be subjected, as we are today, to a constant barrage of frontal attacks or stinging innuendo from our brethren in Israel, questioning our sincerity as Jews or Zionists, designating us as second class members of the Jewish people, denouncing our faith in the possibility of creative Jewish living in America as illusory and our efforts to vindicate that faith as futile.

In current Zionist literature one is repeatedly told that: "It is incumbent upon us to implant in our youth the recognition of the fact that it is impossible to live full lives as Americans and at the same time creative and genuine Jewish lives. The good Zionist has no alternative to settlement in Israel." Ever so often I have the feeling that we need someone today who, from Israel, should echo Jeremiah's message to the "Golah", "to build houses and dwell in them, plant gardens and eat the fruit of them, take ye wives and beget sons and daughters and multiply ye there and be not diminished."

Perhaps the time for such a message is not yet ripe. Perhaps the emphasis must still be on "Aliyah", settling in Israel. But the time will come when this other message will be one of the utmost importance, and unless we have men in Israel who understand it and prepare the ground for it now, Israel may later have no one capable of formulating the message with authority, and the "Golah" will have no one capable of receiving and understanding it.

One of the experiences bearing upon this problem which inscribed itself indelibly upon my memory is associated with the exercises opening the Hebrew University on Mt. Scopus in April 1926. Professor Mordecai M. Kaplan was one of the visiting public lecturers during those stirring days, and I never forgot the manner in which Dr. Magnes introduced him. He said, "I believe that a Jew can live a good, full, Jewish life anywhere in the world. But I have decided to live in Eretz Yisroel. The gentleman I am about to introduce to you believes that a full, good, Jewish life is possible only in Eretz Yisroel. But he lives in the 'Galut'."

Dr. Magnes did not go on to enlarge upon that paradox. He merely referred to it as another one of the many, strange paradoxes abounding in human life. For the truth of the matter seems to be that the problem of the relationship between Israel and the Diaspora belongs intellectually to the same realm as the problem of the relationship between God's mercy and His justice, or between God's Omniscience and man's free will. Its solution cannot be propounded by a series of logically irrefutable, syllogistically formulated statements.

To take hold of any one element of a paradox and declare it to be the whole truth is to commit spiritual and intellectual suicide. To build one's life on God's mercy alone or God's justice alone, on absolute determinism, or on absolute free will, is to invite either fanaticism, madness or chaos or all of them together.

The inescapable, logically insoluble paradoxes of human life can be met successfully only by an act of faith which transcends the paradox and the individual elements within it, but includes all of the elements of the paradox within itself. Faith in the worthwhileness of human life includes within itself both free will and determinism. As occasion requires it, such faith utilizes either free will or determinism to vindicate itself. Such faith steadfastly and wisely refuses to be defeated or paralyzed because of the intellect's inability to reconcile the logical contradictions inherent within the means which faith employs for its own purposes.

We must recognize that the statement that only in Israel can a Jew fulfill himself creatively and Jewishly is an invitation to the Jews of the Diaspora to commit spiritual suicide. At the same time the unequivocal statement that it is possible to fulfill oneself creatively and Jewishly in the Diaspora implies at least a theoretic denial of the indispensability of Israel to Jewish life. The two statements are absolutely contradictory.

Nevertheless men of keen intellect and brilliant expression have supported each one of the statements by logical structures so sound and cogent as to be beyond the possibility of absolute refutation. To expect, therefore, that one should make a choice between life in Israel or life in the Diaspora on the basis of a logically formulated argument is to ask that a logical reason be given for choosing one of two equally acceptable roads to a desired goal.

Let us cease to goad one another to distraction to make an unequivocal choice in favor of one of two equally valid alternatives. Let us not be Joshuas, constantly demanding of every one, Halanu atah im letsarenu, "Are you on our side or do you belong to the enemy?" Let us rather ever remember that while physically we can, at any one time, be either in the Diaspora only or in Israel only, spiritually we can be in both places simultaneously.

We can transcend the paradox presented to us by the Israel-Golah controversy only by an act of faith — a rather presumptuous, perhaps even a somewhat arrogant faith — but a faith nevertheless which is at the core of all suffering and hope of our people. It is a faith reflected in the response which Joshua received from his celestial visitor: "I am here, he said, not to do your bidding, nor the bidding of your enemy. I am here to do God's bidding." And when one firmly believes that the Jews are here to do God's bidding, he finds no contradiction between Israel and Golah.

On the contrary, the two appear as the opposites which are indispensable for the highest and noblest forms of unity. For God has so created the world that differences are as vital to unity as likenesses. The unity of the family is based on differences between husband and wife, parents and children. There can be no family of husbands only, or of children only. The unity of the economic order is based on differences between agriculturalist and manufacturer, artisan and laborer.

The wonderful unity of our religious traditions is the result of the Machlokot Tahem shamayim, the differences between Priest and Prophet, Hillel and Shammai, Abaye and Rabah, Elijah Gaon and the Besht, for they were differences that found their ultimate spiritual reconciliation in men who acted L'shem shamayim, "for the sake of Heaven."

And I venture the opinion that only those Jews who believe both in the Golah and in Israel with equal wholeheartedness, will have the wisdom to transcend and to include both aspects of Jewish life within their own lives, and to guide the affairs of our people both here and in Israel in a manner that will bring blessing to the Jewish people and mold a Jewish people which will be a blessing to mankind.

Such an individual will always be among the restless because when in Israel he will be thinking of the Golah and say to himself, "Here in this land it is easy to serve God. I ought to be out in the Diaspora, helping those in spiritually less favorable circumstances to live as Jews." And in the Golah he will be restless because he will feel that there are certain mitzvot that are t'luyot baaretz, certain opportunities to self-fulfillment as a Jew which are available only in the land of Israel.

But at the same time he will also be serene because he will know that the heritage of Israel is not hemmed in, either by time or space, that Moses, Maimonides, the Gaon of Vilna, never lived in Israel, but share with Amos, Hillel and Akiba the glory of complete spiritual fulfillment as Jews as well as human beings.

BY ARTHUR HERTZBERG, RABBI, OF NASHVILLE, TENN., IN THE NATION

The Kasit is the only cafe in Tel Aviv which has permission to remain open after midnight. Situated on Tel Aviv's "left bank," that is, the left bank of the Yarkon River, it is the hang-out of writers and theatrical people, and apparently the authorities feel that intellectuals cannot be expected to go to sleep early.

I often visited the Kasit while in Tel Aviv, and was interested by the geographical grouping of its patrons. Outside on the left sat the youngsters who dropped in after midnight because it was the only place open. In the center were the hangers-on of culture — business men of the city and American tourists visiting one of the "places to go to." The interesting people sat at tables at the right. These were the actors of Habimah, Israel's major theater, gathered around its queenly feminine lead, Rovina, and a number of middle-aged writers and poets who had come to Israel in their young manhood and remembered well the Europe they had left.

In a small inside room with no more than six tables — at one of which a chess game was always in progress — an assortment of young intellectuals, most of them native born, made another cultural center. In this group were the actors of the new Chamber Theater, an avant-garde organization, and the poets, novelists, and would-be dramatists of the generation which had just finished fighting the war. Oblivious of the established leaders of Hebrew art and letters who sat outside, this new generation eagerly discussed the "progressive culture" — Tarbut Mitkademet — whose banner it had unfurled.

When I brought up the works of the new writers to one of the middle-aged authors, he ironically compared the "progressive culture" of the younger men to the often quoted request of a harried Tel Aviv bus driver to the standees: "Please progress backward." Despite such witticisms and the inevitable literary charges and counter-charges, Tarbut Mitkademet is the important new note in Israeli intellectual life. It is barely a year old as a full-scale movement and still far from realizing its many implications — farther yet from the maturity which will be reached when first and second books are followed by third and fourth. Nevertheless, the current ferment reveals much about Israel today and perhaps something about what it may become.

Rebellions in culture are often as significant for what they negate as for what they affirm. Tarbut Mitkademet rejects most of its own Hebraic past as well as almost all foreign models. Its adherents feel that they are radically and unsentimentally different from the Jewish literary figures of the past two millennia. The past means the ghetto; the sabra (native-born) Israelis represent the exact opposite — the élan vital of the new nation.

This striving toward freedom and secularism is not a new note in Hebrew letters. It has existed since the revival of creative writing in Hebrew in the last century. The Russian Hebrew poet Gordon sounded it in the 1860's and 1870's with his bitter criticism of rabbinic narrowness, as did the almost contemporary Tchernichowsky when he dared in one of his poems to kneel before Apollo instead of the austere Jewish God. The now middle-aged rulers of Israel themselves started on the road to Zion by rebelling against their pious orthodox upbringing.

However, this newest literary revolt against the Jewish past is the most thoroughgoing yet. The older generation knew the ghetto in their childhood and are still in part of their being sentimental about the world now gone. So they put on the boards of Habimah plays like "The Dybbuk," and they read Agon, the greatest living Hebrew novelist, whose favorite theme is a magnificently stylized nostalgia. Their sons did not grow up in that milieu and need not struggle to forget it.

There is another difference between fathers and sons. Thirty or forty years ago the older generation had in mind certain clear prototypes in whose image they wanted to build their new Jewish world. They sought to repeat the Western political and cultural achievements they knew as young men and women fresh out of Poland and Russia. Weizmann can still labor for an Israel on the pattern of the constitutional republics he admired in Western Europe at the turn of the century. The somewhat younger Ben-Gurion is still under the spell of the Second International, which was a force to be respected before 1914.

Even the Central Europeans who came to Palestine after 1933 long for a Hebrew-speaking counterpart of the culture of Mozart and Goethe. The sabra has known none of these worlds at first hand. His direct experience with their often vicious epigones in the last fifteen years — that is, in his own lifetime — tends to make him regard them as "gods that failed." He has not forgotten an upbringing under the shadow of Nazism. He remembers that the enemy against which he fought Israel's war of liberation was a British Socialist government not too seriously restrained by democratic America.

The fathers are well aware that they are a transitional generation. Their cultural task as they view it is to lay the foundations of a national style for Israel which shall combine both the prolonged Jewish eighteenth century and the liberal Western nineteenth. This approach to a national culture is rejected by the younger men. Somewhat raucously they charge their elders with lacking roots in the soil of Israel, from which alone worth-while cultural expression can be derived. The past as they know it seems rather rancid. The thinking of the sabras reflects their experience, which has been in part twentieth century with a vengeance and in part peculiar to themselves.

They have in common with the rest of their generation all over the world the experience of war. Their distinction is that the whole of their conscious lives has been colored by armed conflict. In earliest childhood they knew the bitter tensions of the days of the British mandate. They were adolescents at the time of the Arab riots in the middle and late thirties. During World War II many of them served in the Jewish Brigade. On their return home the veterans frequently became members of the illegal Haganah or the even more hunted Irgun and engaged in the twin tasks of resisting the British and furthering the underground immigration. The climax of course was the war with the Arabs after partition, in which the new state was saved by the valor of its young men. A Norman Mailer writing about the war must come to terms with three years of New Guinea. The new writers of Israel have almost all their conscious past to evaluate.

They share with the post-war voices of the West the malaise of finding the present something of a betrayal. But here too there is a difference. Most of the young writers in America today began to be "premature anti-fascists" in college and are continuing in the well-established literary tradition that Alfred Kazin has termed "alienation." Israel's present avant-garde, while critical, is not basically at loggerheads with the new nation. The sabras, like their elders, have great national pride. Though they frown on patriotic language as "Zionist talk," they are only superficially blasé. They may borrow a bit of cynicism from Western post-war novels or internationalism from the general atmosphere, but they make one intense affirmation: they believe in the importance of their destiny in being charged with creating the new Israel.

From this act of faith they derive their guiding principles — national unity, national responsibility, and national progress. Such a program, which imposes on literature important social duties, makes them proof against the prevailing Western fashions. The act of choice is not the painful problem it has become for tired European ex-partisans now turned existentialist. "Montserrat" in Hebrew translation was a success recently in Tel Aviv, but the men of the Haganah in its audience were not much moved by the hesitations of its hero. As writers the group of sabras who sit around the tables of the Kasit's little room are trying to create an indigenous national style based on the simplest of all relationships, that between a land and its people. That the land is far from built and the people not yet much more than a conglomeration of widely differing refugee communities does not stop them.

Inevitably emphasis is laid on original works in Hebrew, and just as inevitably the young and the old together can simply not produce enough to satisfy the demand of a highly literate reading and playgoing audience. Most of the current publications are translations from foreign languages and are being read avidly. The canon of national criticism, however, is constantly becoming more fixed. When Elisabeth Bergner appeared recently on the Israeli stage, her performances were mobbed, but many voices were raised against permitting her to take out her acting salary in scarce dollars. In December Habimah presented "Barbara Blumberg," by a German-Jewish author now living in the United States. According to reports it seems to be "Stella Dallas" in Hebrew via the German. Dr. Hayyim Gamzu, the drama critic of Haaretz, Tel Aviv's leading daily, concluded his review as follows:

"Finally, have we the right to permit ourselves the luxury of staging performances that say nothing to us? What can the Israeli public possibly find in such a play? Whom does it interest? The decorations are very elaborate, involving expensive tariffs. Such decorations — for such a play!"

Hebrew writers too are weighed in the national scales and often found wanting. Zalman Shneour, acknowledged master in contemporary Hebrew poetry, is now visiting Israel after spending the last several decades in Paris and New York. Though unquestioned respect for his literary stature is felt in Israel, his reception, particularly by the young writers, was distinctly unfriendly. Blunt questions were hurled at him: Where were you during the fighting? What is your personal commitment to Israel?

With the yardstick of commitment Tarbut Mitkademet is assessing the world it knows, the Kibbutz (communal farm), the underground struggle with the British, and the war of independence. Since the 1920's almost a new tradition of sentimental writing about the Kibbutz and its utopian socialism has grown up. The most successful new play about Israel's war, "Arvoth ha-Negev" ("The Plains of the Negev"), by Yigal Mosinsohn, extols the heroic devotion of a Kibbutz under Arab attack and even lets the young soldiers of the Palmach come off second best by comparison. Because of the conventional piety about the Kibbutz and the Socialist orientation of most of the young writers, criticism of the farm colonies has been expressed in somewhat uneasy fashion. Their narrowness and often ingrown character, however, have been more than merely mentioned.

Tel Aviv may be Babylon to some of the writers — Mosinssohn writes about it with the disenchantment he perhaps learned from the early Hemingway — but it too must be fitted into their subject matter and their outlook. The underground and the war are favorite subjects. Something of a literary myth is being made out of the recent deeds of valor. The claims of ex-Irgunists on one hand and of former members of the Palmach on the other are being disputed in a flood of paper-backed books — histories and memoirs as well as novels.

Nationalism has not yet reached its full flowering and is far from having run its course in Israeli life and letters. The national ethos is not yet created. Nevertheless, ultimate moral questions unbounded by the national horizon are already being asked, and precisely by the man and women who fought the war.

S. Yizhar is generally considered the most promising of the younger writers. Even the older literati who sneer at the slangy, experimental, and often barbaric style of his contemporaries agree that he is a novelist to be watched. Yizhar recently published two novelettes whose theme was the treatment of the Arabs in the truce period, when a new and undisciplined Israeli army was playing the unaccustomed role of victor over an inferior foe. Yizhar burns with shame at the assaults on the Arabs' human dignity, at the lack of a desire to bridge the gap between victor and vanquished. How, he asks his countrymen, can you play god and know that "the Arab sitting over there has his life, health, home, family, the warp and woof woven by his being, in your hands — you, the little god sitting in the jeep"?

The book was obviously written in the midst of the events it discusses. Both the subject and the point of view are daring and new. But is Yizhar's outcry really unprecedented in Hebrew letters? Did not Elijah once denounce Ahab in burning cadences in Naboth's vineyard? Did not Amos once speak glowingly of the national pride of Israel — and demand its dedication to all mankind?

Nutritionists suggest that homemakers interested in getting the most for their food dollars should take care to purchase the foods recommended by Canada's food rules. A second point in economical feeding practices is attractive preparation which cuts down on waste. Food bills are a major expense on the family budget. Careful handling of this item will help cut your family cost of living.

Israel Needs Liberal Judaism

BY ISAIAH ZELDIN, RABBI, EAST END TEMPLE, NEW YORK

It was my fortunate lot to have been in Western Galilee when the Israel newspapers reported on Rabbi Abraham Feldman's speech before the Central Conference of American Rabbis, charging that Israel was moving toward a theocratic state. I was riding on a bus heading for Hanita, one of the northern-most outposts along the Lebanese border, when my neighbor outshouted the groaning motor by remarking to me: "So that's what an American Reform rabbi thinks of us." I tore the newspaper he was reading away from him and hastily read what I recognised to be a distortion and vilification of Reform Judaism in general and Reform rabbis in particular. The newspaper, "Haaretz", usually a liberal organ with rather accurate reporting, carried a feature article by its New York correspondent characterizing Rabbi Feldman's speech as an attack on the good intentions of Israel and volunteering the information that Reform Jews celebrate Sunday in place of the Sabbath and Reform rabbis lead their congregations along the road to assimilationism!

Above the grinding noise of the bus, which took half an hour to wind up the hill to Hanita, I painstakingly explained the basic tenets and practices of Liberal Judaism. It was more in the nature of a question and answer period with everyone on the bus taking part, to the dismay of the driver who was sweating out the hairpin turns leading up to the settlement. It developed that of the bus full of Israelis, only two were wont to go to synagogue; the remainder thought religion to be a force retarding progress. It was not that they had no faith or that they were atheists, they simply could not carry on the practices of Orthodox Judaism nor could they hold to many of its tenets which, in Orthodoxy, are more or less basic.

A few days later, I chanced to be in Tel Aviv on a Saturday morning. Hordes of Israelis trekked down to the beach for the conventional Saturday morning swim. The Tel Aviv beach on Saturday is a striking facsimile of Coney Island on a Sunday afternoon; one has to stake a claim for a spot on the beach and extend one's elbows for a place in the sea. The sixteen or so synagogues had each less than two "minyonim" worshippers, except for the Great Synagogue on Allenby Street which was rather crowded. On early Saturday afternoon the Israeli sleeps and in late afternoon he promenades on the all-too-numerous cafes. Shops are closed and buses do not run in Tel Aviv on the Sabbath, but any religious spirit that might have been there was smothered by the bustling crowds in the streets.

A visit to Jerusalem explained the apparent irreligiosity of the Israeli. For there I came in contact with the "Neturai Karta," the guardians of the city. They were mostly old Jews, and young ones who looked like old Jews, with "payot" and long black garb which made them look like pictures out of a medieval story book. And their ideas were just as medieval as their garb. In Jerusalem I learnt that it is true that the "Neturai Karta" did not permit a food convoy to enter Jerusalem during the days of the siege because the convoy broke through on the Sabbath. It is also true that they overturned a jeep and pelted an Israeli soldier with stones because he dared deliver a military message on the Sabbath. And it is true that they disowned their own children when they [illegible]

"Neturai Karta," observe, and carry out the observances in their manner; and their uncompromising demands are backed by threats and actual violence.

At present, in Israel, the coalition government includes the Orthodox element, not the extreme "Neturai Karta" groups but an Orthodox element that claims a monopoly on religion. Prime Minister Ben Gurion and his party would like to blunt the power of religion in politics, but unfortunately political expediency has thrown the Orthodox element and Ben Gurion's Mapai party into the same government, so the monopoly of Orthodoxy grows stronger with each passing day.

The young Israeli is as disappointed with rigid, unchanging Orthodoxy as is the Liberal Jew in America. But his only alternative is indifference to religion. It cannot be charged that the Israeli is anti-religious. He studies the Bible throughout his grade school career. As an adult, too, he is thoroughly imbued with the ideals of the prophets. He has absorbed the teachings of Judaism and carries out its message in his every-day life. His faith and trust in God have enabled him to overcome a foe many times his number. If at present he ignores the Jewish religion and neglects the practices of Judaism, it is because he has been driven from the faith of his fathers by those who erroneously imagine they are the protectors of the faith.

Therefore Israel needs Liberal Judaism. It needs a liberalization of outdated tenets and a revival of newer practices to replace older ones. Perhaps the Liberal Judaism he develops will only remotely resemble our American Liberal Judaism, but the Israeli will have to return to the fount of his inspiration, to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And his return to Judaism will be an enlightened religion in the spirit of American Liberal Judaism if not entirely in its form. Artificial and temporary restrictions may retard the day of the return, but Israel needs a Liberal Judaism. And judging from past performances, when the Israeli needs something, he gets it.

and "unbending" to describe his attitude.

With regard to the Ward medal, the report said "some misadventure not attributable to Professor Knickerbocker" caused an incomplete listing of Mr. Gurewitch's marks when the award was made.

The report's conclusion said in part:

"The charge of anti-Semitism, involving as it does a state of mind, is difficult to prove in this case because of paucity of direct evidence...

"The conflicting evidence, coupled with the factor that enough of the incidents complained of involved individuals of the Jewish faith, added to the evidence of Professor Knickerbocker's limitations in relation to his students, predominantly Jewish, have made him vulnerable to a charge of anti-Semitism.

"While we do not believe that the evidence necessarily sustains such a charge, we likewise do not feel that it necessarily exonerates him.

"In view of the divergent inferences which can fairly be drawn... it cannot be said with any degree of certainty that Professor Knickerbocker was anti-Semitic. By the same token, it cannot be said that he was not."

Strong exception to the committee's findings was taken by Justice Hubert T. Delaney, of Domestic Relations Court, whose resignation as chairman of the alumni investigating committee helped precipitate the City College strike.

Justice Delaney said the committee should have followed principles laid down by Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, who, he said, held that the U.N. secretariat "had to be in a position where it could not fairly appear that the actions of any member thereof were anti-Semitic."

Justice Delaney expressed concern that Mr. Davis had not been brought up on charges. He said the former Army Hall director had received "an increase in salary," since his present pay is above his previous instructor's stipend. He said both cases "will tend to undermine the cause of democracy."

The basic charges in the Knickerbocker case were made by the following members of the Romance Languages faculty: Associate Professor Otto Muller; Assistant Professors Eliot Polinger and Ephraim Cross and Dr. Pedro Bach-y-Rita.

Noting that much of the direct testimony against the department head had come from Dr. Muller, the committee found that Dr. Muller had a grievance against his chief, who had withdrawn a recommendation that Dr. Muller — formerly a close friend — be made a full professor. The committee cited testimony by Professor Knickerbocker that Professor Muller, too, had made anti-Semitic remarks.

The committee's chairman was Harold Wisan, '18. Other members, in addition to Mr. Ehrhorn, were John Schulman, '16; Jerome Alexander, '96; Jonas J. Shapiro, '18; Victor S. Axelrod, '27; Julius Lasses, '17; Leo Eisen, '18; Harold Lipton, '16, and Allen G. Aaronson, '46.

the Teaching of Religious Thought.

Many smaller bequests and one, of an undisclosed amount, to the Hebrew Union College were made in the thirty-five-page will. Although the estate was formally valued for probate as exceeding $100,000, Dr. Berg's attorney, Aaron Simmons, of 271 North Avenue, New Rochelle, N.Y., said its value was almost $4,000,000.

Outstanding were gifts of $500,000 to Mount Sinai Hospital for a research laboratory named in memory of his brother, and of an estimated $400,000 to the American Hebrew Congregations.

This latter amount, made available just before Dr. Berg's death, is being used to build the seven-story House of Living Judaism for which ground was broken last month at Fifth Avenue and Sixty-fifth Street.

Dr. Albert Berg and Dr. Henry Berg were born in New York and both became outstanding specialists, the former in the field of abdominal surgery, the latter in the treatment of smallpox and diphtheria. Dr. Henry Berg was also the discoverer of the cause of congenital clubfoot. They lived, kept offices and collected rare books together. Neither ever married. Two sisters, Mrs. Delia Warschauer and Mrs. Millie I. Levy, received undisclosed amounts in trust in the will.

In Tribute To William Lyon Mackenzie King

The Zionist Organization of Canada, in a statement by its co-presidents, Samuel E. Schwisberg, K.C., of Montreal, and Edward E. Gelber, of Toronto, joined in voicing tribute to the memory of the late William Lyon Mackenzie King, one of Canada's outstanding humanitarians and statesmen, who played so important a part in the development of Canadian unity and statehood.

The statement recalled that it was through Mr. King's administration that the Canadian Government played such a vital role in the creation of the State of Israel, adding: "Jewry throughout Canada and more particularly the many thousands across the country affiliated with the Zionist Organization of Canada, will ever remember Mr. King's deep understanding of the problems involved in the homelessness of hundreds of thousands of Jews and the efforts of his Government to fulfill the aspirations of a Jewish national homeland in Palestine".

The Schwisberg-Gelber statement read: "We in Canada join countless thousands throughout the world in mourning the loss of one of Canada's outstanding humanitarians, statesmen and [illegible] was a deep understanding of the problems involved in the homelessness of hundreds of thousands of Jews, bought about by Hitler's war against the democracies. Jewry throughout Canada, and more particularly those many thousands associated with the Zionist Organization of Canada will ever cherish his memory for the efforts of his Government to fulfill the aspirations of the Jewish people throughout the world by the creation of a Jewish national homeland in Palestine. It was under his administration that Canada played such a leading part in the historic decision taken by the United Nations in November 1947 for the partitioning of Palestine and the creation of the Jewish state. His administration, through the Government's representatives in the United Nations, consistently upheld this decision. As Canadians we mourn the loss of one of our country's greatest statesmen and humanitarians. We and the world owe much to his clear insight into international problems, to his selfless devotion to his country's service and to his unyielding struggle for a workable United Nations so that all mankind might live together in peace and harmony."
